Hague, November 28.

IT was generally believed, that after so many Delays, the Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Spain, having lastly been sent over to England engrossed in Form, and then returned hither approved by the British Court, would forthwith have been Signed: But we now learn that the Plenipotentiaries of Spain have demanded, anew to have certain Articles contained in the Treaty altered or explained: And though the Lord Bishop of London has done all he could to remove these Difficulties, 'tis thought they will not be easily adjusted. As far as we can learn, the present Difficulties are in substance these following, viz. The Spaniards refuse to admit at Cadix an English Consul with the Powers of a Judge for their own Nation, independent of the Spanish Courts of Judicature: That the Spaniards demand a Duty of Forty per Cent of all Merchandises which the English shall import into Spain, that are not of the British Growth or Manufacture: That they would restrain the Duty of Eight and a Half per Cent (which the English would engage themselves by Treaty to pay, for those Goods only which are of the British Produce): That they would make the Duties which the English Merchants formerly paid in Catalonia, Valencia and Arragon, and which were very moderate, equal to the high Duties which they are obliged to pay in Castile: And that the English shall not carry on Commerce in the Spanish West Indies, but by Favour and under the Name of Biscayners. We shall see whether it will not be necessary at length for France to interpose in this Affair: as also in the Treaty between Spain and Portugal; for though within these few Days it has been reported that that Treaty was on the Point of being Signed, 'tis now said that the Spanish and Portuguese Ministers, after having had a Conference the 25th Instant, have sent Expresses severally to their respective Courts for new Orders: So that we must wait for the Return of those Expresses, to judge whether that Treaty be so near signing or not.

The Envoy of Prussia having declared to the Deputies of the States-General, that the King his Master is ready to consent to an amicable Negotiation touching the Reliance of the Duke of Holstein, provided Assurance be given him that his Danish Majesty will not make himself Master of Tonninghen in the mean while; the said Ministers have conferred thereupon with the Danish Minister, and have desired him to write to the King his Master for his Declaration thereupon. 'Tis hoped more than ever, that this Affair will be adjusted amicably; and that notwithstanding the Preparations for the march of the Prussian Troops are continued, there will not be a Rupture between the two Crowns.
